SUPREME COURT CHAMBERS—THE LAW OF DIVORCE—JERSEY MARRIAGES.—Ives v. Ives. The defendant was the wife of a man named Handy in Boston. Some years ago she procured a divorce from Handy or the ground of neglect, but this divorce was simply from bed and board. She then came to Brooklyn and married the plaintiff. Her first husband followed here, and obtained an absolute divorce from her on the ground of adultery. The plaintiff and defendant thereupon went to Jerse and remewed their marriage. By the law of New York the divorced party are forbidden to marry, and the plaintiff now applies for a decree of nullity of marriage, on the ground that the New Jersey marriage was in content of the content of the content of the ground that the New Jersey marriage was in content of the content of th
